The authenticity workshop is a “must attend” event for everyone. Whether you are a man, woman, partner or associate, everyone can benefit from being their authentic selves at work. I don't think I've ever attended such a fantastically interactive and thought provoking workshop which I feel I am already benefitting from.

Authenticity in the corporate world

To celebrate International Women's Day 2020 and the theme of equality, Macfarlanes has teamed up with Women Lawyers and Mothers to deliver this interactive and engaging workshop, designed to give men and women an insight into how to improve their mental health and wellbeing at work through the power of authenticity.

We will discuss the skills, techniques and opportunities you need in order to manage, navigate and control your career.

Designed to equip participants with the skills to have authentic conversations, the workshop will help you to overcome some of the professional challenges and/or burnout that is all too common when you feel unable or disempowered from having honest and authentic conversations with those who matter the most at work and at home.

Led by: Hannah Beko and Somaya Ouazzani

Hannah is a commercial property partner at Gunnercooke and alongside her legal practice works as an executive coach and corporate trainer covering personal and business development skills for lawyers.

Somaya is a former City lawyer and teaching fellow at UCL. She is the founder of Mimoza Fleur Recruitment, a specialised search agency and her work has a particular emphasis on partner recruitment, including where appropriate elevating outstanding senior associates into partner roles.
